LORD, let me know mine end, and the number of my days; that I may be certified how long I have to live. Behold, thou hast made my days as it were a span long, and mine age is even as nothing in respect of thee; and verily every man living is altogether vanity. For man walketh in a vain shadow, and disquieteth himself in vain; he heapeth up riches, and cannot tell who shall gather them. And now, Lord, what is my hope? truly my hope is even in thee. Hear my prayer, O LORD, and with thine ears, consider my calling; hold not thy peace at my tears; O spare me a little, that I may recover my strength, before I go hence, and be no more seen.

Notes on Selected Portions of Today's Music

The Opening Hymn:

One of the saddest lives ever lived was that of the author of this hymn text, William Cowper (1731–1800). Early in life, Cowper developed a chronic melancholia and despondency which plagued him till death. In one state of mental torment, he even attempted suicide by drowning in October, 1773. Though Cowper wrote much fine devotional material, he was continually troubled by the lack of assurance of his own salvation. Today, however, his hymns are often referred to as “part of the prized treasures of the Christian Church.”

William Cowper (pronounced “koo-per”) was born on November 15, 1731, in Great Berkhamstead, England, the son of the chaplain to King George II. Following a period in his early life when he attempted to study and practice law, Cowper eventually moved to the village of Olney, where he began an association and firm friendship with John Newton, pastor of the Olney Anglican parish church. In 1799, the combined talents of Newton and Cowper produced the famous Olney Hymns Hymnal, one of the most important single contributions made to the field of evangelical hymnody. In this ambitious collection of 349 hymns, sixty-seven were written by Cowper with the remainder by Newton.

During Cowper's residence in Olney, he stayed with a Mrs. Unwin, who remained his devoted friend and guardian till the end of her days. This home is now a very popular museum in Olney, containing interesting relics, books, and portraits of Cowper and his friends. Behind the home is the lovely garden where Cowper and Newton met nearly every day to work on their hymns. O for a closer walk with God is said to have been written on December 9, 1769, during the serious illness of Cowper's dear friend, Mrs. Unwin. In a letter written the following day, referring to this event, Cowper wrote:

She is the chief of blessings I have met with in my journey since the Lord was pleased to call me.... Her illness has been a sharp trial to me. Oh, that it may have a sanctified effect, that I may rejoice to surrender up to the Lord my dearest comforts, the moment He may require them.... I began to compose the verses yesterday morning before daybreak but fell asleep at the end of the first two lines: When I awakened, the third and fourth were whispered to my heart in a way which I have often experienced.

The hymn first appeared in Collection of Psalms and Hymns, compiled by William Cowper, in 1772. When it was later included in the Olney Hymns Hymnal, Book 1, it bore the title Walking with God, based on Genesis 5:24: “And Enoch walked with God: And he was not; for God took him.” O for a closer walk with God reflects in a most poignant manner the inner struggles of William Cowper's sensitive soul and his earnest desire to experience the inner serenity of God's abiding presence in his life.

Other well-known hymns by William Cowper include: Sometimes a light surprises [#443], God moves in a mysterious way [#310], often described as the finest hymn on God's providence ever written, and Hark, my soul! it is the Lord [#459]. Not only did Cowper contribute much to hymnody, but he was also one of the most respected secular poets of the eighteenth century. Several of his best-known works include a translation of Homer, a widely acclaimed volume of poems entitled The Task, along with his most famous literary poem, John Gilpin, a happy and mirthful narrative.

The Offertory Anthem:

Maurice Greene (1696–1755) was a chorister of St. Paul's Cathedral in 1706 and organist from 1718. He was a close friend of Handel and himself a musician of considerable stature and wide interests, combining with his position at St. Paul's the posts of organist and composer to the Chapel Royal, professor of music at Cambridge, and Master of the King's Musick. His manuscript collections of church music formed a foundation for William Boyce's three great published volumes of music.

Lord, let me know mine end is a piece of unique quality, and is remarkable for the dramatic contribution made by the accompaniment to the music's sombre effect. The figure-bass is an unbroken succession of single crotchets [quarter notes] which suggests the inevitable progress of Time: above this the voices weave phrases in steady and subdued imitation as each part in turn takes up the troubling questions of the shortness of man's life and the fearful uncertainty of his future hope. Although these questions seem to be answered (“truly my hope is even in thee”) at the beginning of the last section, the relentless crotchets are not silenced, and the music paces on to its sombre conclusion.
